Comment On Sports

By Pete Fritsche

Washington.- There is just a chance that the National League pennant race this year will be closer than anyone suspected it would be. In a column two weeks ago we picked the Bums as the favorites for the senior loop flag this year.

We still rate them as the team to beat. After all, they whipped the Yankees in the World Series, and that isn't exactly rolling off a log. But keep in mind that the Dodgers appear slightly weaker this year, and that must be reconciled with the fact that several clubs are greatly strengthened.

In other words, the Dodgers' 1955 mastery is being shaved off at both ends. They themselves are weaker and the competition might be much stronger. It could make for a very rugged race.

Here are the clubs which are stronger: St. Louis, Milwaukee, New York and Cincinnati. At least, the managers think so. The Bums are just as strong. First, they've lost Podres. Second, sore arms are bothering other members of the pitching staff. Third, some of the old pros are getting older.

Does this make for a hot race—contrary to the expectations of many writers? This column's author believes it probably does. Of course, nothing is certain. But certainly the Cardinals shouldn't roll over and play dead as they did this year like they did in Milwaukee, certainly, unless Tom Copley and several others come off the mark. And the other potent teams in the league, which should make it a time they play the Bums, it may well be that they have a tough league to repeat, because the keen in the American.

The Yanks have a big lead over the Bums, but they started off taking a lost four out of five games to finish in front. That hates to finish in front by a fair, he didn't have his best. Whatever he did, he still was a flop in the World Series, and the Yankees.

The Yanks are a big club. Cleveland is about the same, and the Red Sox and the Tigers are two most improved clubs in the American League, in my opinion. The Tigers might be a surprise this year. The question is whether the Tabs can take the tough going, that is likely to come in August and September. They might make a run at the Dodgers this year.

IN FASHION NOW

Patio parties, dinner and dancing at the country club, or summer outdoor functions for an entirely different type of dress in keeping with the occasion.

Bright, gay colors, charming prints seem to be the favorite. They fit the mood and the atmosphere of a gala outdoor social. Many of these dresses seem to be full-skirted and fashioned of cotton.

An unusual neckline or strap arrangement usually adds a high light. The color combinations are striking and team together such colors as curry and moss green or shrimp and yellow.

For country clubbing, the dress is a bit more formal than for patio parties. Such fabrics as raw silk and satin cotton are perfect.

Those smart little box jacket suits, with their Paris - inspired back interest, are being seen everywhere. The newst line is a lowered belt, buckled at the back. They are fashioned of featherlight wool, tweed, linen, rayon, and combinations of these materials. The lines are becoming to almost all figure types and the cut will probably be with us for many seasons to come.

Good sheath lines are still a mark of fashion. Silk shantung and linen are especially well adapted to the cut of this dress for summer.

Chantilly-type lace is the outstanding type of lace being fashioned into dream dresses for the summer. Not so much cotton lace will be about as in the past.

A dress of Chantilly type lace may represent an investment but will be a good one. With simple lines, you will be able to enjoy the dress for many years to come.

BLUE MOLD TREKS UP FROM SOUTH

Blue mold, a devastating disease of tobacco when not controlled, continues its trek up from the south towards Virginia.

S. B. Fenne, plant patrologist, says the disease is widespread in some North Carolina counties. The damage, however, has not been too extensive. Most tobacco growers are treating beds with one of the fenham, zineb or maneb fungicides.

Virginia growers should keep a close watch on the path of the disease and be ready to apply fungicides at the proper time. Cool, wet weather is an aid to blue mold, Fenne said.
